JASON DARDEN

Understanding and living in a community with people who are different than ourselves takes honest conversations between real friends. Jonathan and Jason Darden talk about race in the church and their own lives, asking and responding to hard questions with love, grace, and laughter.

JERRY TAYLOR

Spiritual integration, the openness of our hearts through the Holy Spirit, is an antidote to the rigidities, greed, hatreds, and prejudices that destroy our world. In this episode, Dr. Jerry Taylor discusses the need for individual spiritual integration to achieve true racial integration in our communities.

SCOT MCKNIGHT

Paul's churches were the first racially diverse gatherings in history. Jonathan and Scot discuss what the Bible has to say about the responsibility of the church during times of social unrest.

RICHARD BECK

God often comes to us in unexpected ways. You will not want to miss Richard Beck sharing this experience in his own life in "The Gospel According to Johnny Cash."

JOSH ROSS

"The call of God is not to go into survival mode." Josh Ross, author of the book, Re/entry, applies the lessons he learned in Barrow, Alaska, to our re-emergence from quarantine. Residents in Barrow experience sixty-five days of darkness every winter and must be purposeful to thrive when the sun returns.

MIKE COPE

Throughout history, people have asked themselves why good people suffer. Mike Cope and Jonathan take a look at how the practice of lamenting addresses the question of suffering by giving us an outlet for the pain.

JOHN MARK HICKS

John Mark Hicks and Jonathan take a closer look at the importance of table fellowship, especially during this season, and how the table of Jesus transforms our life and relationships.

JEFF CHILDERS

Christians throughout history have found Jesus in their suffering. They can teach us valuable lessons about finding God in new and closer ways by not trying to escape the suffering in our own lives. Jonathan Jeff Childers take a look at how we can follow Jesus in suffering.

SEAN PALMER

Jesus promises he will be with us but how do you really live a "WITH God" life? Join Sean Palmer and Jonathan for a conversation about how practicing spiritual disciplines changes you from the inside out.

RANDY HARRIS

We all tend to want to trust in our own ability, which breeds anxiety in times of crisis. Randy Harris and Jonathan discuss how contemplative prayer can help us connect with God and fight our anxiety.
